

PROJOSHARE

Shamika Nelson'17

Dr. Madalene Spezialetti

It has been said that the best way to learn about something if one has no experience is to hear the stories of other individuals who have the experience. The website ProJoShare, which stands for professional journals to share, will provide a platform for individuals, specifically non-professionals of all ages, to gain the information that they are seeking about experiences in a variety of industries. Non-professional users will be able to share their professional experiences and evaluations of those experiences and receive answers to their questions from one another and from the professional users. An additional user type named company will be able to search the evaluations of non-professionals to conduct research and possibly improve their programs based on the feedback. ProJoShare will serve as one of the fundamental platforms for individuals wanting guidance for their professional futures.