Michael Curtis "Mike" Munger is an economist and a former chair of the political science department at Duke University, where he continues to teach political science, public policy, and economics. He is a prolific writer, and his book Analyzing Policy: Choices, Conflicts, and Practices is now a standard work in the field of policy analysis. His latest book Choosing in Groups, written with his own brother, is an introduction to the logic and analytics of group choice as he continues to develop a means of "representing" the preferences of citizens so that institutions can be studied more carefully. In 2008 he was the Libertarian candidate for Governor of North Carolina.

He has been published in the American Political Science Review, the American Journal of Political Science, and the Journal of Politics and has had books published with the Cambridge University Press and the University of Michigan Press. Since March 2012 he has been a member of the Board of Visitors of Ralston College. He also serves as an Adjunct Scholar at the Cato Institute<sup>[3]</sup> and as a member of the Academic Council of the Jack Miller Center.
