55th Reunion Discussion Session:
*Defining and Managing Your Legacy

At our 50th Reunion, we had a wonderfully interactive discussion of what we called the “7th Inning Stretch.” This year, we’ll follow up on that discussion to share perspectives on what legacies we want to nurture and how to accomplish that. It is said that we die two deaths—one when we physically die and the other when we cease to exist in the memories of others. One’s legacy relates to the latter. There also is the notion of trying to pass along values, life’s learnings, and some historical perspectives to future generations, whether attributed to us or not. Some of our classmates have written autobiographies, others have penned extended letters to future generations, and for others, “legacy” is not personally identified. There are countless ways to have one’s deeds and values live on long after us and to give historical perspectives to future generations. Do you/should you care about any of that? What steps have you taken or planned to take? Share your perspectives with your classmates, and hear their views on these thought-provoking issues.

Some examples of sustainability-conscious elements of the weekend include, but aren't limited to:

- Offering sustainability-focused keepsakes including reusable grocery totes
- Providing water bottle filling stations around campus
- Increasing plant-based food options
- Reducing food waste
- Reducing use of plastic plates, cups, and cutlery
- Creating campus signage that is evergreen and may be used at future events

VIRTUAL PARTICIPATION

You can view the opportunities for virtual participation at www.trincoll.edu/AlumniAndFamilies/Reunion/ReunionPlan/Celebrate-Virtually/.
