Sara Berkeley's first poetry collection was published in Ireland and Canada when she was 19. This has been followed by six further collections, a novel and a book of short stories. Her work has been widely anthologized in Europe, Canada and the United States.

In her newest collection, Some of the Things I've Seen (2023), Sara follows a number of sightlines: watching the landscape from the window of a plane, contemplating the effects of climate change, and witnessing human vulnerability and resilience in her work as a hospice nurse during the height of the pandemic. Throughout these poems, Berkeley maintains a tender awareness of the threats that surround us, especially for the children born into this increasingly uninhabitable world, as well as a keen appreciation of the passion and poetic insight we will all need to survive.
