General electives refer to courses that, while not emphasizing human rights per se, provide crucial background or theory for understanding rights issues. These courses may 1) address the history, politics, or structural conditions of a marginalized group; 2) focus on systemic violence, conflict, or discrimination; or 3) examine the broader context in which civil-political or economic-social-cultural rights are violated/protected. Please note that specialized electives can also count as general electives. Students wishing to substitute courses not on this list should consult with the Director of Human Rights*
